In the debate on who will own cars, Hyundai picks Uber, Grab

BLOOMBERG
Seoul, February 12

AS GOOGLE'S WAYMO, General Motors and others race to bring driverless automobiles to showrooms, the argument over who will buy cars in the technology era is getting louder. Hyundai Motor, a latecomer to electrification and autonomous driving, is betting against individuals owning robot cars and preparing for a future in which the biggest buyers will be ride-sharing giants such as Uber Technologies., Lyft and GrabTaxi. The South Korean automaker said last month it invested in Singapore-based Grab, Southeast Asia's biggest cab-hailing service. "The trend is now changing," Woongjun Jang, director of Hyundai's Advanced Driver Assistance System Development Group, told Stephen Engle in a Bloomberg Television interview on February 8. "In the past, people liked to own their cars. In the near future, I think the owner of the self-driving market will be mobility-service providers." Jang is the latest to weigh in on a topic fiercely contested by some industry veterans including Carlos Ghosn. The chief of the Franco-Japanese Renault-Nissan-Mitsubishi Motors alliance said in November that the traditional model is here to stay and alternative forms of mobility would only make a marginal impact. While Uber chief product officer Jeff Holden has termed individual car ownership as "very inefficient" and will go away, Subaru's Tom Doll said most people will continue to own or lease their vehicle in much the same way they do today. "For real people, swapping out a car, getting all their stuff out — the pens, papers and dog hair — it's a pain," Doll, president of Subaru of America, said at the Chicago auto show.

Nafta's red tape fight hits snag as biz group sounds alarm

BLOOMBERG
Ottawa, February 12

THE US, CANADA and Mexico are at odds over a proposal to beef up Nafta's powers to cut red tape, as one major business group warns efforts to simplify regulations could end up taking a step backward.

Canada wants to roll the existing US-Canada Regulatory Cooperation Council into the North American Free Trade Agreement, a pact Donald Trump is threatening to quit. Advocates of the Canadian proposal liked the idea of entrenching stronger harmonisation of rules on things like food safety and drones while also adding Mexico into the mix — and doing so would also boost another Trump goal of cutting red tape for businesses.

But the push has hit a wall. The US is signalling a scepticism for a trilateral council and that accepting it may require a power shift — if rolled into Nafta, the council would move under the control of US Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer's office. A Lighthizer spokeswoman declined comment, while a business group that initially backed the idea is now sounding an alarm by saying USTR doesn't have the expertise to do this.

"Putting it under USTR is not the right answer. This is not a place to resolve disputes," said Maryscott Greenwood, the chief executive officer at the Canadian American Business Council who is closely involved in Nafta talks. In a survey of business council members' Nafta priorities, regulatory harmonisation topped the list. "Our preference is to have the status quo on steroids. If you can do that through Nafta, terrific," Washington-based Greenwood said. Instead, the US power shift would "put the brakes on it."

The US, Canada and Mexico began renegotiating Nafta in August at the insistence of Trump, who's said the deal led US companies to fire workers and move factories south of the border. He's threatening to quit and initially wanted a deal by December but talks could now potentially stretch into 2019.

Trump has also boasted about clawing back certain business regulations at home, and a joint effort with Canada has been led by the RCC since its creation in 2011. Regulatory cooperation is a sleepy term that means governments aligning their rules for things like safety testing that allow a product to be sold. Standardised rules cut costs on such things as testing and labelling, and substantially simplify trade for business.

Bullet trains transforming world's biggest migration

BLOOMBERG
Beijing, February 12

MILLIONS OF CHINESE cram onto trains to make the annual pilgrimage home for the Lunar New Year holiday. It's a crowded and often uncomfortable experience that is rapidly being transformed by the country's push into the world of high-speed rail. China already has the globe's longest bullet-train network, but it's plowing 3.5 trillion yuan ($556 billion) into expanding its railway system by 18 percent over the next two years, to 150,000 km, or more than 93,000 miles.

Much of that will be spent on extending the high-speed network westward, which includes parts of the country that ancient Chinese poet Li Bai once lamented were so mountainous that getting there was as challenging as reaching the sky.

Almost 400 million people — that's more than the US population — will travel by train over the Lunar New Year, also known as Spring Festival. China's factories and offices shut down for the week-long holiday, which unleashes the largest migration of humans on the planet. Many of the country's 1.4 billion citizens return to their hometowns for family gatherings, or, increasingly, are taking the chance to be tourists both at home and abroad.

While the advent of cut-price flights has dimmed the appeal of rail travel in other parts of the world, in China it's on the rise. Last Spring Festival saw a record 10.96 million trips on one day, and for the first time more people took bullet trains than conventional ones, according to official data. Almost nonexistent in China a decade ago, high-speed rail has exploded, with more than half of the 25,000-km network built between 2013 and 2017. The plan is to expand it by more than 50% by 2025, with eight main bullet-train lines running from east to west by 2030.

BJP candidate eyes 'vote division' boon

NONGPOH, FEB 12: The BJP candidate Marian Maring, who is vying for the Congress stronghold Nongpoh, has expressed her confidence of having the last lough in a four-corner battle.

Being the bastion of Congress stalwart DD Lapang, who has retired from electoral politics, Congress' chances in the constituency cannot be ruled out while the NPP and the UDP also have fielded strong candidates.

However, Maring feels she would make her way through as the "votes would be divided among the three parties", keeping aside the BJP votes.

"More and more people have pledged to support the BJP for a change," she claimed.

Besides the indigenous people, she said, the BJP is getting support from the non-tribal community and the numbers (supporters) are swelling day by day.

"I have many dreams to transform the Nongpoh constituency in terms of roads, health care, farmers' welfare etc., if elected as their representative," she said.

She also exuded confidence on the party going to form the next government in the state with its message 'Sab ka sath, sab ka vikas'.
