Daycares and playschools are letting parents keep a constant eye on their kids via livestreaming. A good security measure, can it lead to helicopter parenting?

Mohua.Das@timesgroup.com

ast week, Delhi chief minister Arvind Kejriwal announced that all government schools in the Lity would be fitted with CCTV cameras. Parents could, at any time, check in on their children via a phone app that would offer them a real-time view of the classroom.

Live surveillance cameras, once confined to airports, offices, hotels and high-traffic areas, are increasingly popping up in schools and playschools. A rise in reports of abuse at schools has led to this step.

Schools have even started to advertise their heightened surveillance. Their promotional flyers not only highlight curriculum, space, and hygiene, but also the opportunity to "watch your child in the classroom".

Playschools pride themselves on their latest tech acquisitions like live webcams that allow parents to watch their child play, eat, nap, and interact with others. The attendant app includes a child safety tracker, on-demand video conferencing and notification of their child's activities - services that set many young parents' minds at ease.

"The independence of checking on your child whenever you want to is comforting because you miss them and are anxious to know that they are fine in a new environment," says Hamir Kaur who leaves her six-month-old daughter at a playschool, while she works.

"Parents are full of anxiety, fear, and doubts when they leave their children here. To put their fears to rest, the best way is to help them see their children via live feed. Many of the parents are glued to the camera feed all day," says Kanika Behl, co-founder of Courtyard, a preschool and daycare centre in Mumbai's Tardeo that has around eight cameras panning the playroom, hall and sleeping room to the kitchen, gate and parking.

While the Maharashtra women and child development ministry made it mandatory for all daycare centres and playschools to install cameras after a 10-month-old girl was assaulted by an attendant at a daycare centre in Navi Mumbai, the phenomenon is catching on across the country.

Swati Popat Vats of the Early Childhood Association estimates that around 80% of playschools across India now use CCTVs and around 40% livestream.

However, Vats, who is also director of the preschool and daycare chain Podar Jumbo Kids, has steered clear of live-streaming at their 460 centres across the country. "It could be a safety hazard if the phone is hacked. Anyone could keep a watch on a child and his habits. Second, there might be parents who wouldn't want their child being watched by other families," she says, explaining her resistance to the idea.

Whether livestreams offer added security, throw up greater security challenges or create more anxiety among parents is a tricky question. Megha Tulsian, who returned to the workplace after placing her two-year-old son at a daycare, found herself perpetually torn between her desk and the livestream. "It was a lot of anxiety in the first month," says Megha, who stayed hunched over her cellphone watching her son for three straight hours until she felt assured that her son was in safe hands. It has been seven months, and Megha still looks at the webcam, but less frequently.

But often the pros outweigh the cons for playschool owners. Some claim that the live cam access is an extension of their open-door policy. "We have always encouraged parents to physically stop by during the day to watch their child in class. They are given a laptop in the waiting area and can either watch their child live or rewind to a certain time of the day," says Sonia Chugh of Happy Minds International in Powai that has 15 cameras installed in each of its four centres.

"We have not had any negative response to the live cam in almost five years of running our daycare. Parents find it reassuring and many have used our service because of them," says Kanika Behl. The live cam facility is increasingly becoming a determining factor for many parents, agrees Megha Tulsian. "If this wasn't available, I would have been reluctant to send my son there. It is just the security of knowing there's genuine care and attention," she reasons.

"We take it as constructive criticism if a parent calls us to instruct that their child should be sleeping or eating in a certain way," says Sonia Chugh. There are times when there are panic calls from parents fretting about the 'whatifs' when their kids don't appear on the screen when they actually may have gone crawling under the camera but it's all part of establishing trust and

It was also assigned social justice matters as well as cases relating to armed forces and paramilitary forces. Justice Joseph's bench will share the workload in many categories with other benches while exclusively dealing with disputes relating to land laws and agricultural tenancies.

A broad division of work was also carried out for benches headed by Justices A K Sikri, S A Bobde, R K Agrawal, NV Ramana, Arun Mishra, AK Goeland RF Nariman. Justice Arun Mishra-led bench has been assigned petitions relating to admission to engineering and medical colleges, which had kicked up a storm in the SC last year and spilled over to the press conference by four senior most judges on January 12.

J&K govt refuses to · compensate human shield

Sanjay Khajuria | TNN

Jammu: The J&K government on Thursday revealed it had refused to pay Rs 10 lakh compensation - as recommended by the State Human Rights Commission (SHRC) to Farooq Ahmad Dar, who was used as a human shield by the Indian Army in Kashmir last year.

The compensation was declined citing that Dar's human rights were allegedly violated by the Army and not the state government.

In a written reply to National Conference legislator Ali Mohammad Sagar's query about the non-payment of the compensation, chief minister Mehbooba Mufti stated that the government had already fulfilled birtuly by ordering a probe into the case and registering an FIR against the Army for wrongful confinement, abduction and criminal intimidation.

NIA clears 9 held with scrapped notes of terror funding charges

TIMES NEWS NETWORK

New Delhi: Three months after NIA arrested nine persons from Delhi with demonetised currency worth Rs 36 crore on the suspicion that it was linked to J&K terror funding case, the agency has cleared the accused persons of terror charges. Sources said that the accused persons had collected the money with an intention of exchanging it.

A special NIA court has released them on bail, officials said. The National Investigation Agency (NIA) had arrested seven people from Connaught Place in the national capital on November 6 with 28 cartons in four vehicles stashed with demonetised currency of Rs 1,000 and Rs 500 notes. The other two men were arrested in Srinagar the same day.
