WHO expects huge shortage of nealthcare staff in India by 2030

ushmi.Dey@timesgroup.com

w Delhi: The global econois projected to create arod 40 million new health secjobs by 2030, majority of nich will be in middle and gh income countries like Inand China where healthcaservices are growing in dole digits, a latest assessment the World Health Organisan(WHO)shows

The demand will be driven population growth, ageing cieties and changing disease tterns in the next 15 years. Inan healthcare industry, nich is pegged at $70 billion, growing at over 18%. Hower, despite the increasing deand for doctors and healthcare workers, there will be a projected shortage of 18 million healthcare workers globally. Health workers play a crucial role in tackling disease burdens as well as in implementing several government policies and programmes aimed at reaching particularly the ruralareas and distant villages.

WHO's highest decisionmaking body the World Health Assembly has proposed adoption of a global strategy by countries worldwide to strengthen their health workforces, including forecasting gaps between needs for and supply of health workers, collecting and reporting better data, and ensuring adequate funding for the health workforce.
